

MSJVM Transition - Microsoft Application Dependency List

Microsoft is phasing out support of the Microsoft Java Virtual Machine (MSJVM). After December 31, 2007, no updates will be available for the MSJVM. Customers are encouraged to stay informed about obsolete software and to transition from the MSJVM in a timely fashion.

The table below details the Microsoft applications that have been tested for MSJVM dependencies. Microsoft has created many applications over the years and is testing the most popular of those to ensure a thorough understanding of our MSJVM dependencies. MSJVM applications are products that include functionality designed to take advantage of the features only found in Microsoft's implementation of the Java runtime (MSJVM). If the MSJVM is not available, part of the application will not work. Applications that are listed as having MSJVM dependencies also identify options users may choose to continue using application functionality without running the MSJVM.

This list does not represent the status of all Microsoft applications. Not all of Microsoft products require testing and other products still need to be tested. This document will be updated periodically with the status of additional products and posted to <http://www.microsoft.com/java/>.

If you need information about an application not on the list, please contact your local Microsoft representative or contact the MSJVM newsgroup at microsoft.public.java.vm.migration.
